HUD Staff,

I am pleased to inform you that the new HUD.gov website is live. The new HUD.gov is focused on three users: the American people, Partners, and Researchers.

It is solution-focused, meaning users can search by their need and work backward rather than navigating 19 program office microsites, which amounted to over 9,000 webpages and 123,000 documents. For example, an American can search “I need housing” and have all the necessary information in one place rather than piecing together resources from separate microsites.

We are grateful for the partnership from program offices to bring this vision to life and deliver an easy-to-use website that better serves the American public. We look forward to feedback and hope this will be yet another way for the Department to uplift rural, tribal, and urban communities.

Thank you for your work on behalf of the American people,

Kasey Lovett
Head of Public Affairs
